Dear Mr Williams

Thank you for your letter concerning your so-called hiv testing. No further comment or correspondence on this matter, you say, so clearly you are still ordering those hiv testing kits from your suppliers regardless that you know full well that no test has yet been devised that is able to detect hiv infection in a human. This goes without saying as otherwise why test for non-specific antibodies that are liable to cross react with anything and everything. As a magician would do who conjures up a rabbit in a top hat, 'hiv' is conjured up through a laboratory technician misinterpreting the results of a deeply flawed antibody test into the language of hiv/aids, and they do this without any proven science to support it. This is absolutely bizarre, but as you know, this has been going on for the last thirty years and in that time the testing kits have been fine-tuned to the state of the art, but sadly, they still do not test for 'hiv' - a minor hitch, but there you go.

But really, you are asking for trouble especially when you know that these tests are a fraud. Perhaps you are aware of a case pending in India (print out enclosed) that may well end up in a court of law, and if the hospital concerned fails to win the case, then they will suffer a heavy financial loss. If and when this happens, then I wonder if any other hospital will want to get involved in such an issue. All I can say is that I wish Ganesh Prasad the very best and I support him wholeheartedly. Thankfully, he has survived the treatment where many others have not.

As you know, I have already sent your details to The Office of Medical & Scientific Justice - a private investigation agency. So far thirty-eight 'hiv' cases dismissed - print out enclosed. Oh, dearie me, I know that I bring you sad tidings, but please do not shoot the messenger. I have also sent copies of my Manchester Royal letters to the OMSJ, so they are well aware of the goings on in your hospital. To be fair, I do not think that they will be too impressed with your silence, but I am sure that you will know that already.

You may well be aware that since my last letter, the film 'Positively False' has been screened - Andi Reiss (Director) & Joan Shenton (Producer), a film based on this very issue. I suggest that you run this film in your hospital and invite all your so-called hiv patients, but I do not think that they will be too impressed, and neither will you if all your patients suddenly cancel their next appointments, in the process throwing their 'life saving' medications down the drain. Now that would be bad news. As for your doctors, they will have to open their eyes to watch the film - a sad day for your hospital and something totally unfamiliar to them. If you will be kind-hearted, please forward me a couple of tickets with compliments. I would appreciate that very much, I would love to come along, really I would. As an added bonus, you could ask one of your lovely nurses to sell popcorn and ice cream at the interval, but I beg you, no more hiv testing kits, we don't want any more of them. Sadly, the only time you will stop testing is when you can no longer make a profit, when you have no patients, or/and when you have no credibility. From my point of view, you are almost there, or at least you are on the right road and going in the right direction with enough fuel (entrenched denial) to get you there.

Positively False – Documentary Screening and Q&A

Date: 24/03/2012 Time: 6:00 pm - 11:30 pm

“Positively False – Birth of a Heresy. Joan Shenton reaches back to 1987 through her extensive archive of broadcast and non-broadcast video material on HIV and AIDS combining it with current footage. In this documentary dissident scientists, journalists and activists are voicing their concerns about the way the infectious hypothesis for AIDS took over from the toxic one and highlights the impact the dogma surrounding a viral cause for AIDS has had on people’s lives. The film travels through Africa, Europe and the United States revealing the way plague terror, financial objectives and scientific skullduggery have led to tragic examples of toxicity and death from antiviral drugs, social stigma, broken families, fear of sex, homophobia and imprisonment. Positively False – Birth of a Heresy is produced by Meditel Productions Ltd and The Immunity Resource Foundation in association with Yellow Productions.”

But as a hospital that has responsibilities to its patients, I would seriously reconsider your stance on this issue. HEAL London has already reversed two cases of fraud in this country, although for legal reasons the details are hidden. But if a case ever does go to court concerning such a colossal medical blunder, especially concerning your hospital, then you should be extremely concerned, but as I repeat, you are asking for trouble when you depend on the shoddy science, shoddy politics and shoddy medicine that is involved in this issue. I suggest that you take my advice and get out of this ‘hiv zone’ as soon as humanly possible, simply because your hospital is a proverbial accident waiting to happen. If you do not take my advice, and if the worst comes to the worst, you may well suffer the consequences.

As it is, your doctors, through deeply entrenched medical dogma, are lying to themselves and also lying to their patients, and for want of a better word, you are practicing what I consider ‘medical voodoo’ that culminates in a corruption of clinical practice. With sincerity and respect, all I can do is offer you a warning that if you ever suffer the consequences of a criminal case, that your chances of winning are slim, unless, of course, the courtroom is totally corrupt, which is quite another matter. You might then look back and see the mistakes that you have made with deep regret. But you know full well that you cannot stand up in a court of law, especially under oath, and say that you were not aware that a fraud was being committed. If you do, you will be telling yet another lie, and it is very sad to see a hospital in such a position as this. By closing your eyes, all you accomplish is that you let yourselves down as a hospital, your doctors lose credibility, and in turn you also let your patients down in a professional sense, a moral sense and a clinical sense, simply because bad science will always end in bad medicine, which is exactly what you preach concerning so-called hiv. Moreover, concerning science and medicine, you cannot learn when you are stagnant, you cannot move on in knowledge and treatment, and this is shameful. It is obvious that if scientific thought had been correct in the early 1980’s, then so-called aids would or should have been addressed within the first twelve months as opposed to thirty years and you still haven’t a clue where you are going or what you are doing. This in itself is crystal clear evidence of a total failure in science and medicine and why it has been called the biggest medical blunder of the 20th century. I suggest that you put your untenable position to a primary school class, and sad as it may seem, the little children, regardless of every standard issue text book ever written on the subject, will take you to the cleaners.

But just step back in time and look at what exactly has happened over the last thirty years, a small minority of gay boys began a reckless experiment with their lives, this they called ‘fast track’, which culminated in their own self destruction; a brutal assault of chemicals and foreign proteins – a very bad idea. The immune system was under extreme stress through toxins, foreign proteins and immune stressors, and so they got sick and sadly some never made it. By coincidence, the American government scientists were feeling very sad, they were going out of business being as they had just lost the war on cancer and so they needed a new epidemic disease to sparkle up their dull and empty lives, and this was an ideal opportunity. In fact, it was a gift from the heavens, and so instead of a disease affecting an extremely small minority of the gay community, the definition through political deceit and gross over exaggeration exploded out of all proportion, and before we knew it, the whole of the world was infected by a killer virus that no one could possibly escape - it was the beginning of the end of life on earth. But the main issue was the funding, and it flowed aplenty as did the champagne, lobster and the caviar lifestyle. The science boys could once again justify their existence as they had a war on their hands, the drug companies were in their element, they quite literally made a killing in more ways than one, the media sold more newspapers based on gross over-exaggeration, fear and mass hysteria, the 'religious' community had the ideal opportunity to disapprove, moralise and condemn, and the medics merely signed on the dotted line, they had a new toy - hiv testing kit - to play around with, and of course they then took on the role as the saviours of mankind which basically meant closing their eyes and focusing their attention on a so-called killer virus that to all intents and purposes did not exist, whilst at the same time force-feeding the masses with 'life saving' drugs that did not save any lives at all, in fact quite the opposite.

But more important than all this, the funding flowed like the River Nile and then the darkness was no more, the sun began to shine and just like a child's fairy story with a princess and a knight in shining armour, everyone lived happily ever after. It was a dream come true and life was good once again. Anti-hero Gallo came to the rescue and he was the 'action man' regardless that he told a few little white lies that basically turned scientific thought inside out. For anyone testing positive to the dreaded 'virus', the mantra was 'hit hard, hit early', and you certainly did that even before the patients realized that they were sick! This is a classic example of medical voodoo, convincing someone that they are sick and that they will die when in reality there is absolutely no truth in the matter. But we all believed and we all followed like a lamb to the slaughter, and so the remedy followed – a highly poisonous mix of stigma, morality, despair, fear, lies, and the final solution, long-term chemotherapy, and the destruction of the immune system was complete. If the world didn't have aids before, we most certainly had it now and so the long cold war on aids began.

As for Manchester Royal Infirmary, you have played your part in this human drama, and just like everyone else, you have followed the instructions, but sadly fuelled by rotten politics and a total disregard for good science and good medicine. All this has happened in the last thirty years for what was once a disease affecting a very small minority of gay liberators who were experimenting with their own lives. In fact, all of this more or less ended in the 1990s, it was all over by then, but certainly not for the drug companies and the boys in the science lab and the politicians and the medics, simply because they had their own personal agendas. Welcome to Manchester Royal Infirmary, we care for you, we want to make you feel better, come and get tested, we can now treat 'hiv' with our antivirals, we are the backbone of the community, we are the heroes, a miracle in modern medicine. Of course, you fail to mention the bit about bad science and the bad medicine or for that matter that the war you are fighting ended twenty years ago, but the less said about that the better. You will never make any money on your hiv testing kits if you start talking like that, but as we all know, you cannot possibly treat a sociological and political disease by the prescription of a drug, but let's not talk about that either.

But as I say, I am no medic, I am, for want of a better word, uneducated, but I can certainly see a corruption in science, politics and medicine when I see one. Clearly, when so-called 'hiv' begins to suffer from endless legal issues and when those responsible are faced with endless lawsuits, this is when this mysterious virus that changes its shape like a thing from outer space will die a death. The medical authorities will then say that 'hiv' is no longer a problem, so much so that we don't even bother testing anymore. Then and only then will you be able to celebrate a 'cure'. The medics will say that the virus is no longer spreading, that we now have antibodies that will kill it off, and this has happened solely because of an arsenal of antiviral drugs that we have prescribed for the last thirty years, and so we can now claim another medical miracle because we have eradicated the threat of 'hiv' from the face of the earth. Well, to be fair, you have done it before and you will certainly do it again.

It started with a lie, and it will end with a lie, and in between the beginning and the end, you have created a monster, but even I admit that it served a purpose, and that is it generated a massive multi-billion dollar industry, and we all jumped on that bandwagon, including Manchester Royal simply because there were rich pickings to be had. All that was necessary was to sell your collective souls by sitting a doctor in a room with 'hiv expert' branded on his forehead, displaying the bargain of the month, an hiv testing kit to all and sundry, but not forgetting to remove that godforsaken disclaimer beforehand, we don't want our patients reading that now, do we, or even our doctors for that matter! Then put a few hiv signs up in your hospital, a few posters on the wall with a colourful picture of what the dreaded virus might look like if anyone could ever find it (a pipedream), place a few hiv adverts in the local newspaper, spread it around like an 'infectious disease', and urge folk to come and get tested, it's the responsible thing to do. It's called propaganda, my friend, and as we all know, it works a treat.

And lo and behold, here we have a pregnant woman on the ward, she is the perfect victim, so let's test her, its standard procedure, doc. But generating your own patients out of thin air is a nice little earner, we all know that. Not only that, the pregnant woman hasn't a clue what you are doing and neither does the good doctor, but as we all know, the harsh reality is that business is business. So basically, this poor woman enters your hospital and before she knows it she is enticed into the dark and dismal world of hiv testing. She takes the test, yet another cross-reaction, with the inevitable 'hiv positive' result. Oh my god, what a terrible thing, this poor woman is infected! The voodoo doctor is jumping up and down, he has a bone in his hand, he is the god of hellfire – it's that damn virus again, and the prognosis of doom and despair awaits. But wait, help is at hand, once again your friendly hospital comes to the rescue with a cocktail of anti-viral drugs, including the statutory stigma and a very grave prognosis. So this woman has entered your hospital thinking that you will assist her in having the most precious thing in her life - a new-born baby - and before she knows it she has been hexed with a 'virus' that no one can ever find, based on proteins that every human being on planet Earth possess, and a theoretical disease that may or may not materialise in the next hundred years, assuming that a mysterious retrovirus is able to do that (wishful thinking), and finally the sting in the tail, a drug regime to suffer for the rest of her life. The consequence of that is she will get sick and sicker and sicker, whilst the poor little baby may be damaged, miscarried, or even aborted. That my friend is sheer magic! Welcome to Manchester Royal Infirmary! Ok then, throughout the world, we have pointed the witch doctor's bone and quite literally frightened and poisoned a few million people to death over the last thirty years, but sad as it may seem, this is the price that we pay for scientific and medical progress. May god have mercy on your soul!

"Joyce Ann Hafford was a single mother living alone with her thirteen-year-old son, Jermal, in Memphis, Tennessee, when she learned that she was pregnant with her second child. She worked as a customer service representative at a company called CMC Call Center; her son was a top student, an athlete and musician. In April 2003, Hafford, four months pregnant, was urged by her obstetrician to take an HIV test. She agreed, even though she was healthy and had no reason to think she might be HIV positive. The test result came up positive, though Hafford was tested only once, and she did not know that pregnancy itself can cause a false positive HIV test. Her first thought was of her unborn baby. Hafford was immediately referred to an HIV/AIDS specialist..."

Oh, please, I beg of you, if there are any cleaning jobs going in your hospital, please do send me a form to fill in, I could mop a few floors and clean a few sinks and toilets using a strong detergent to mop up all that hiv virus. I could put a sign up on my trolley "HIV Exterminator", and that would certainly leave a deep impression on your patients. I'm not perfect, you know, I oversleep sometimes, the odd headache and tummy ache, but I have a sense of humour and in general I'm a kind-hearted soul, I'm honest and faithful and I was once awarded the 'employee of the month' in my present position. Sadly, I don't suffer from entrenched belief, unlike your doctors, so that isn't good, but apart from that minor setback; I could be the perfect employee with a little patience and training.

But to be serious, I am very sorry to bring you such grim news, and I do realise that I may appear rather cynical, and so I am hardly surprised that you do not wish to comment or correspond on this matter, but regardless, in sincerity, may I offer you my best wishes, health, happiness, and not forgetting your favourite word - prosperity.

Yours faithfully
John Wantling
